GENERAL REFLECTIONS

---

- The problems come from the greed of the mega-publishers industry;
  - We, researchers, perpetuate our dependence on them;
  - This is due to the evaluation/assessment criteria, based on journal prestige metrics and not on the researcher's own value.

ACTIONS

---

- Governments should align their policies concerning publicly funded research;
  - They should avoid encouraging APC gold OA;
  - Funders should align on these policies as well;
  - They should ban the now traditional way of assessing researchers and research based on journal prestige and use criteria more closely related to intrinsic value.

CONCLUSIONS

---

- Governments and funding organizations should enforce immediate OA, support publicly-run publication platforms with open reviewing and reform the evaluation procedures.
  - Personally, I don't believe in any policy based on negotiations with big publishers and even not in any policy based on the traditional publication system.
  - There should not be a split-speed research.
  - There should not be one science for the rich and one science for the poor, neither to read nor to publish.
